Reminiscences of the Golden Gate

It is some eight years ago when the writer of this was one of a party of invited guests to accompany the vessel on her trial trip. SLIDELL ON SLAVERY.—The Baltimore [illegible] furnishes the following which shows that even Slidell [illegible] we would like [illegible] Europe.

A member of the Foreign Legations at Washington, just arrived from Europe, relates of this distinguished rebel a story which is [illegible] in this city.

On [illegible], who holds an office in the Department [illegible], having [illegible] Slidell's source [illegible] first [illegible] second [illegible] slavery. [illegible] French friend was the [illegible] attention on the part of Mrs. Slidell and her husband, who strove to persuade him of the holiness of the Southern cause, and to make him believe in its ultimate success. After having exhausted all their arguments the [illegible] politely addressing Slidell asked whether he was not of opinion that the [illegible] made of the North in this contest was an impediment to the success of the South [illegible] maintenance of slavery [illegible] work [illegible] You [illegible] answered Slidell [illegible] institution [illegible] but please mark, they have not [illegible] This [illegible] day [illegible] the sacrifice [illegible] shall come [illegible] the South will do, no [illegible] what your ancestors did, nearly an age [illegible] France. But [illegible] this sacrifice is [illegible] It would look [illegible] on the part of the South [illegible] and would [illegible] us. Be sure however that the time is not distant when the institution of slavery [illegible] will be forever removed from our statute books. The French Government can greatly assist in this [illegible] with its proverbial prudence and sagacity it may place [illegible] necessity of shortly declaring grad[illegible] an act which would [illegible] the spirit of Christianity and civilization abroad.

SATURDAY MORNING SEPT 13, 1862

The Ravens About!

For a few days the ravens were stirring all about the country They rejoiced in the hope that the Union was about to go under that the late disasters to our arms were the beginning of the end – that "matters were working" in the loyal States against the Government and even that Abe Lincoln would soon be a refugee from justice.

We have no hesitation in saying that we feel deeply pained when misfortunes befall our arms —that any adverse fortune which would lead us to fear there was a remote possibility that our Government might be destroyed fills us with sorrow and [illegible] And we plainly say to our secessionists, be they writing for secession papers be they in official positions, or be they found anywhere, that when they utter treasonable sentiments and express the belief and give evidence of pleasure that the Government is to fall before the rebellion, and that the blow falls upon faithful hearts, it does hurt us everywhere We all feel our country's woes—our country's disasters

Ravens' notes disclose the real character of their authors He who can treat lightly the misfortunes of the country —who can express joy and pleasure when he hears that the old flag trails in the dust—let his expressions of regard for the Union be what they may—he is a traitor at heart He would even come out far more boldly did he know that the fatal blow was struck at the life of the Government Now, he half covers up his feelings with the pretence that "he has heard bad news"—but if he dare, he would express his joy thereat.

It is well that events are bringing out the characters of men The people should know them. They should be sifted out from among loyal citizens. And, in our estimation they would consult decency, and perhaps honor, (if they have any,) should they, like a late official officer in our neighboring Territory, "refuse to live under the Government of Abe Lincoln," and seek safety under a foreign flag. We would from our hearts rejoice to see all traitors taking the same direction

Our troops may meet with disasters. Even in the Revolution this was the case, and yet the result was glorious So will it be with us: As in the days of our Revolutionary fathers, traitors found it convenient to leave a country where they were opposed to the Government so it will be in the days of their sons. We are not astonished to hear even at this stage of the rebellion, the curses of refugees from a new Nova Scotia

The news which came to us in the last dispatch, has quieted for the moment the notes of the ravens They are almost loyalists now! They were never hostile to the Government! They always loved the Union! Oh, no. They have a deep reverence for it—though they are hostile to every measure of the Government and the people which have been and are employed to sustain it

Their notes rise as the country sinks,
And cease as their country rises

UNION RESOLUTIONS —We call the attention of our readers but more especially those who claim to be partisans, to the fact that the resolutions introduced by Mr McBride, in the Senate, on Tuesday last, received the unanimous vote of both branches of the Legislative Assembly, notwithstanding the fact that it is known that two members in the Senate and one in the House are avowed opponents to the war and the grand policy of the present Administration It is true that the young man in the house rose from his seat previous to voting thereon and attempted to explain his vote but we are informed that his explanation left the members of the House in still greater mystery why he should vote to endorse such sentiments His remarks only tended to show still greater inconsistency with himself, or demonstrated the probability that he did not understand himself on the subject matter of the resolutions The two gentlemen in the Senate voted aye, without a word of explanation, under the probable determination to either, sit still and swallow the wholesome dose, let it be ever so strange to their taste, or they too must have taken it down without knowing what it was until it was too late. However, it will do neither of them any harm, but probably good, and we have slight hopes that before many days of the session shall have passed, they will begin to see and realize the wholesome effects, and conclude to take a lot more of the same sort "While the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest rebel may return" Hence we have hopes for these gentlemen yet, as one important specific has already entered consciences calculated to heal and purify

PREPAYMENT OF VOLUNTEERS –The San Francisco Bulletin says

Orders have been received from Washington that each volunteer soldier upon mustering in shall be entitled to receive one month's pay ($13) in advance and $25 of the $100 bounty money making $38 that he receives immediately

LEVY OF TAXES –The Assessment Roll of Multnomah County was accepted by the County Commissioners yesterday Total valuation of property $2,914 [illegible] The taxes are one mill for schools two mills State and seven mills for the County

LATEST FROM THE EAST.

Dates to Sept. 6th.

MARYSVILLE, Sept 8 — News contained in reports yesterday is made up from a series of rumors and cannot be abridged, but give you prominent items

The Board of Commissioners of the Union Pacific Railroad met in Chicago Sept 2d

The Federal forces were defeated at Richmond, Ky and fled in confusion falling back towards Covington Cincinnati is also threatened by Humphrey Marshall with some [illegible] 000 rebels

Banks is reported to have arrived at Centreville with his command safe

Federal Generals Stevens and Kearney, are reported killed

Sigel was wounded in the right hand in the recent battles near Bull Run

Rumors and stories of the most extravagant character prevail, but are not traceable to any reliable source

The Federals are being largely reinforced

Gen McClellan has been assigned to the fortifications of Washington

Poindexter the Missouri guerrilla has been captured and sentenced to death as a spy

It is rumored that the guerrilla Forest with his whole force have been captured near Alexandria Kentucky

The foreign news is pacific All English journals have modified their articles on the rebellion

NEW YORK Sept [illegible] New Orleans papers of Aug 25th, do not mention the surrender of the Forts below the city Reports to that effect are undoubtedly false

The troops from Baton Rouge were encamped near Carrollton The city continued healthy

WASHINGTON Sept 5th —From careful calculation, it is believed our wounded in recent battles will not exceed 6 000 The prisoners will not exceed 2,000, principally taken while straggling All of them have been paroled

CHICAGO Sept 5th – Dispatches from Cincinnati, to-day mention no change in state of affairs there Troops from various portions of the State arrive constantly Citizens are doing all that is required for defense

It seems somewhat doubtful whether it is the intention of the rebels to attack this place Had they intended to do so they could have arrived there on Wednesday or yesterday – Every hour's delay on their part only strengthens the city's defense

WASHINGTON, Sept 4th It has been ascertained that rebels in recent engagements did not fight with their entire force, having a powerful reserve to be made use of as exigencies might require The most reliable among the conflicting reports is that the rebel force comprising at a guess 100 000 men were still moving through Thoroughfare Gap, branching off into the Valley and striking up toward Harper's Ferry

Paroled prisoners say rebels express confidence of crossing into Maryland in heavy force In the course of a few days they will doubtless make the attempt.

There is nothing new to-day

Quite a number of officers are in the city, including Gen Pope and Sumner.

Five rebel scouts crossed yesterday at Edward's Ferry, and were seen at Poolsville They did not remain long. Such reconnoissance is thought to be frequent

A regiment of cavalry was at Edward's Ferry yesterday, and amused themselves by saluting our men on the Maryland side with their field pieces, doing no damage

It is ascertained that the rebel troops seen at Vienna were for the most part worn out soldiers that went there as a place of refuge

WASHINGTON, Sept 5 —The city maintains usual quiet There is nothing new from front; feeling of security everywhere prevails

Burnside's troops are by this time in proper position.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 6 —Dispatches from Falmouth, dated this morning, say scouts report rebels to be within four miles of that place with artillery

A dispatch from Pomeroy, Ohio, says Spencer, Roan county, (Va,) has surrendered to the rebels.

Washington, 4th—Rebels appeared in force at Fall Church Thursday evening, drove in our pickets. Our artillery wagon train fell into their hands, but our troops rallied and recovered it yesterday Rebels fell back shortly afterwards going towards Leesburg

New York, 4th —Herald's correspondence says a detachment of New York mounted rifles on a scouting expedition from Suffolk, a few days ago, captured, near South Mills, a company of rebels with a train of twenty eight wagons, en route for Richmond

A special, to New York, World says We are reliably informed and believe that on Thursday, Secretary Stanton handed in his resignation of the portfolio of Secretary of War, which was promptly accepted by the President, and Halleck asked to take the post —Halleck accepted.

Washington, September 6th. —Most of the Union people about Winchester and Leesburg have made their escape into Maryland; others were captured by secessionists and thrown into prison

CINCINNATI, Sept 6th —The Times which was suppressed, made its appearance again to-day

A bridge of boats is being built across the river at the foot of Walnut Street—it will be completed to night

Citizens are required to be in their houses at nine o clock in the evening

Troops continue to pour into the city

The gunboats are constantly patrolling the river for miles above and below

WASHINGTON, Sept 5th —There is no difference whatever in the belief that the rebels are extending their lines into valley of Virginia, with a view to cross into Maryland

In front of our army, yesterday six or eight miles distant from our most extended outposts, clouds of dust and other appearances indicated artillery among the enemy and the sound of cannonading for a short period, seems to confirm this, whatever may be the fact no danger has resulted, The rebel prisoners now here, represent the loss of the enemy in recent battles as extremely heavy The estimate of the number is far greater than the suggested reports of the loss on our side

A rebel mail recently captured in the vicinity of Fredericksburg, confirms the report of the enemy's losses, especially among officers —including Gen Ewell

COMMANDER IN CHIEF —Gen Halleck is actually Commander in Chief On the 11th of July, the President issued an order appointing "Major General Henry Wager Halleck as Commander in Chief of the land forces of the United States" It will thus be seen that Halleck is not as was supposed, a mere assistant to the Secretary of War

SAN FRANCISCO NEWS —A telegram to the Union, dated San Francisco Sept 5th, says

Legal Tender five dollar notes are plentiful and are taken at par by importers in most cases

Up to date $20 000 has been collected in this county for the Federal poll tax

Born to Love Pigs and Chickens.

(Concluded.)

But Eph had heard this news with the blood hot in his temples Was that proud woman coming again to look at him with contempt, and here, too, where the rusticity, which he presumed to be the object of her scorn, would be a thousand times more flagrant and visible? And yet, with the entreaty on his lip, that his cousin would refuse to receive her, his heart had checked the utterance—for an irresistible desire sprung suddenly within him to see her, even at the cost of tenfold his former mortification

Yet, as the preparations for receiving Miss Hampson went on, other thoughts took possession of his mind Eph was not a man, indeed, to come off second best in the long pull of wrestling with a weakness His pride began to show its colors He remembered his independence as a farmer, dependent on no man, a little comparison between his pursuits, and life, such as he knew it to be, in the city, soon put him, in his own consciousness, at least, on a par with Miss Hampson's connexions This point once attained, Eph, cleared his brow, and went whistling about the farm as usual—receiving without reply, however, a suggestion of his cousin Meg's, that he should burn his old straw hat, for, in a fit of absence of mind, he might possibly put it on while Miss Hampson was there

Well, it was ten o'clock on the morning after Miss Hampson's arrival at Bracely farm, and, as we have said before, Miss Pifflit was in despair Presuming that her friend would be fatigued with her journey, she had determined not to wake her, but to order breakfast in the boudoir at eleven—Farmer Bracely and Eph must have their breakfast at seven, however, and what was the dismay of Meg, who was pouring out their coffee as usual, to see the elegant Julia rush into the first kitchen, courtesy very sweetly to the old man, pull up a chair to the table, apologize for being late, and end this extraordinary scene by producing two newly-hatched chickens from her bosom! She had been up since sunrise, and out at the barn, down by the river, up in the hay-mow, and was perfectly enchanted with every thing, especially the dear little pigs and chickens!

"A very sweet young lady!" thought old Farmer Bracely'

"Very well—but hang your condescension!" thought Eph, very distrustfully

"Mercy on me!—to like pigs and chicken!" mentally ejaculated the disturbed and bewildered Miss Pifflit

But with her two chicks pressed to her breast with one hand, Miss Hampson managed her coffee and bread and butter with the other, and chattered away like a child let out of school The air was so delicious, the hay smelt so sweet, the trees in the meadow were so so beautiful, and there were no stiff sidewalks, and no brick houses, and no iron railings, and so many dear speckled hens, and funny little chickens, and kind-looking old cows, and colts, and calves, and ducks, and turkeys—it was delicious—it was enchanting—it was worth a thousand Saratogas and Rockaways How anybody could prefer the city to the country, was, to Miss Hampson, matter of incredulous wonder.

"Will you come into the boudoir?" asked Miss Pifflit, with a languishing air, as her friend Julia rose from breakfast.

"Boudoir!" exclaimed the city damsel, to the infinite delight of old Bracely, "no, dear! I'd rather go out to the barn. Are you going anywhere with the oxen to-day, sir?" she added, going up to the grey-headed farmer, caressingly, "I should so like to ride in that great cart!"

Eph was a little suspicious of all this unexpected agreeableness, but he was naturally too courteous not to give way to a lady's whims. He put on his old straw hat, and tied his handkerchief over his shoulder, (not to imitate the broad riband of the royal order, but to wipe the sweat handily while mowing,) and, offering Miss Hampson a rake which stood outside the door, he begged her to be ready when he came by with the team. He and his father were bound to the far meadow, where they were cutting hay, and would like her assistance in raking.

It was a "specimen" morning, as the magazines say, for the air was temperate, and the whole country was laden with the smell of new hay, which somehow or other, as everybody knows, never hinders or overpowers the perfume of the flowers Oh, that winding green lane between the bushes was like an avenue to paradise The old cart jolted along through the ruts, and Miss Hampson, standing up and holding on to old Farmer Bracely, watched the great oxen crowding their sides together, and looked over the fields, and as she saw glimpses of the river between the trees, seemed veritably and unaffectedly enchanted The old farmer, at least, had no doubt of her sincerity, and he watched her, and listened to her, with a broad, honest smile of admiration on his weather-browned countenance

The oxen were turned up to the fence, while the dew dried off the hay, and Eph and his father turned to mowing, leaving Miss Hampson to ramble about over the meadow, and gather flowers by the river side. In the course of an hour they began to rake up, and she came to offer her promised assistance, and stoutly followed Eph up and down several of the long swaths, till her face glowed under her sun-bonnet as it never had glowed with waltzing Heated and tired at last, she made herself a seat with the new hay under a large elm, and with her back to the tree, watched the labors of her companions

Eph. was a well built and manly figure, and all he did in the way of his vocation, he did with a fine display of muscular power, and (a sculptor would have thought) no little grace Julia watched him as he stepped along with his rake on the elastic sward, and she thought, for the first time, what a very handsome man was young Bracely, and how much more finely a man looked when raking hay, than a dandy when waltzing And, for an hour, she sat watching his motion, admiring the strength with which he pitched the hay, and the grace and ease of all his movements and postures After a while she began to feel drowsy with fatigue, and pulling up the hay into a fragrant pillow, she lay down, and fell fast asleep

It was now the middle of the forenoon and the old farmer, who, of late years, had fallen into the habit of taking a short nap before dinner, came to the big elm to pick up his waistcoat and go home As he approached the tree, he stopped, and beckoned to his son

Eph came up and stood at a little distance, looking at the lovely picture before him With one delicate hand under her cheek, and a smile of angelic content and enjoyment on her finely cut lips, Julia Hampson slept soundly in the shade One small foot escaped from her dress, and one shoulder of faultless polish and whiteness showed between her kerchief and her sleeve, and all over neck, and in large clusters on the tumbled hay, lay those glossy brown ringlets, admirably beautiful and luxuriant

And as Eph looked on that dangerous picture of loveliness, the passion, already lying perdu in his bosom, sprung to the throne of heart and reason

(We have not room to do more than hint at the consequences of this visit of Miss Hampson to the country It would require the third volume of a novel to describe all the emotions of that month at Bracely farm, and bring the reader, point by point, gingerly and softly, to the close We must touch here and there a point only, giving the reader's imagination some gleaning to do, after we have been over the ground)

Eph Bracely's awakened pride served him the good turn of making him appear simply in his natural character, during the whole of Miss Hampson's visit By the old man's advice, however, he devoted himself to the amusement of the ladies after the haying was over; and what with fishing, and riding, and scenery hunting in the neighborhood, the young people were together from morning till night Miss Pifflit came down, unwillingly, to plain Meg in her attendance on her friend in her rustic occupations, and Miss Hampson saw as little as possible inside the boudoir The barn and the troops of chickens, and all the out door belongings to the farm, interested her daily, and with no diminution of her zeal She seemed, indeed, to have found her natural sphere in the simple and affectionate life which her friend Margarine held in such superfine contempt, and Eph, who was the natural mate to such a spirit, in his own home, most unconsciously worthy of love and admiration, gave himself up irresistibly to his new passion

And this new passion became apparent, at last, to the incredulous eyes of his cousin And that it was timidly but fondly returned by her elegant and high bred friend, was also very apparent to Miss Pifflit And, after a few jealous struggles, and a night or two of weeping, she gave up to it tranquilly—for a city life and a city husband, truth to say, had long been her secret longing and secret hope, and she never had fairly looked in the face a burial in the country with the "pigs and chickens"

She is not married yet, Meg Pifflit—but the rich merchant, Mr Hampson, wrecked completely with the disastrous times, has found a pleasant asylum for his old age with his daughter, Mrs. Bracely And a better or lovelier farmer's wife than Julia, or a happier farmer than Eph, can scarce be found in the valley of the Susquehannah
